Having heard so much of the white-ribbon wave which is sweeping o'er the country, the old bewhiskered Farmer quits the soil and turns his attention to the disreputable enterprise of making "Redeye." He locates his distillery in a little cave far back on the ridge of a rocky range, hidden from both the inclement weather and the eyes of the law. His little dog Fido is his only accomplice and together they thrive. Fido keeps watch while the old man works and also delivers the liquor to their various customers who like in wait along the rugged passes.

Upon one of these trips, Fido is discovered by "Eagle-eyed Pete" the revenue officer and let it be known that "Eagle-eyed Pete" is one tough bird, who shoots to kill.

The Federal Officer commands the dog to halt and just as he is about to examine the contents of Fido's load, the dog spots his star and with one big yelp is off in a cloud of dust.

The Federal Officer follows and soon trails Fido to his master's dive.

Al Falfa seeing them coming, grabs his gun and the battle is on, and leave it to Al to get out of a tight place.
